

KIELY AND DESMOND BEFORE GRAND JURY

Appearance of Chiefs Sets Four Courts Agog With Curiosity as to Their Mission There.

BUCKET SHOPS THE SUBJECT.

The Greeley, Williams, Durney Affair Also Responsible for Their Presence—Charges Against Detectives.

The appearance of Chief of Police Kiely and Chief of Detectives Desmond before the Grand Jury yesterday caused no little comment in Four Courts circles.

It is understood, however, that the chief was summoned there for the purpose of being called to submit evidence relative to the existence of bucket shops, which are being investigated, and also to offer further information concerning the missing and missing Detective George Williams, Special Officer Richard Durney and former Detective George Greeley, who are charged with having assaulted "Pete" Killian in a saloon on Chestnut street several nights ago.

Reports of an investigation being on in the Grand Jury room into the Greeley affair were confirmed by the grand jury, the members of the police force of some of Chief Desmond's subordinates were also in circulation, but neither of the police heads would discuss it.

In the Greeley, Williams and Durney cases there have been some new developments since their arrests. On Oct. 10, Greely made a full confession, which followed.

The Grand Jury decided to take further evidence in the cases. The consensus of opinion is that, although there was no intent to kill, the charge of Durney with assault to kill in an indictment will scarcely follow.

The absence of Assistant Chief of Detectives Kiely from his office for the past several days is thought to have given some foundation to the reports that were in circulation yesterday relative to an investigation being made into the Greeley affair, said to have been filed against certain members of the detective department.

Other reports are to the effect that Assistant Chief of Detectives Keeley was on the streets "for the good of the service." Chief Desmond also says he is working on the Greeley case.
